FINANCIAL AID AND PREGNANCY

eou.edu/TitleIX

Pregnancy changes how you will fill out your FAFSA. If you are providing at least half of your baby's financial support, you can list them as a dependent on your FAFSA.

A child or pregnancy alone does not qualify you as an independent on your FAFSA. You may meet other criteria as independent, such as:

- turning 24 on December 31 of your base year
- if you are married as of the date applying

To learn more about eligibility, contact EOU Financial Aid Office.

YOUR RIGHTS

If there is concern you are being discriminated against because of your pregnancy, please contact the Title IX coordinator to learn more and get support.

- Excused absences are required if your doctor deems them medically necessary. This is also true if there is no leave policy for students with other conditions.
- EOU is required to allow you to return to the same academic and co-curricular status at the beginning of the medical leave.
- Professors cannot refuse to accept work after the deadline if you miss during a pregnancy absence during the term.
- EOU is required to allow you to participate in classes and co-curricular activities without a doctor's note. An exception in such cases is if all students are asked with physical and emotional conditions to provide a doctor's note.
